'Studies have linked chlorpyrifos to brain damage in children, especially when it's sprayed on nearby fields or found in contaminated drinking water. EPA's move to ban this toxic pesticide will remove it from all crops and drinking water, a huge win for farmworkers who are most at risk. As Virginia Ruiz of Farmworker Justice says, "It's a step forward on the path to environmental justice. Farmworkers and their families, who are predominantly poor and majority people of color, bear the brunt of poisonings from pesticides and pesticide drift."

'Vision and planning: both playing key roles as the #California #HighSpeedRail Authority works to develop stations. Our vision is that high-speed rail stations will serve as more than just a train stop, they will transform cities, create community hubs and be iconic of the state. That is why we're calling them "Station Communities". The video below is a conceptual representation of how our Station Communities can grow over time. While this may not be exactly how the stations will look, it does represent our plans for sustainability, functionality and the use of best practices at each of our high-speed rail stops. Visit http://www.hsr.ca.gov/Programs/Station_Communities/index.html for information on the individual station communities.'

"In a 2005 study, Ruth Ludwin, then a seismologist at the University of Washington, together with nine colleagues, collected and analyzed Native American reports of earthquakes and saltwater floods. Some of those reports contained enough information to estimate a date range for the events they described. On average, the midpoint of that range was 1701," The New Yorker noted. "It does not speak well of European-Americans that such stories counted as evidence for a proposition only after that proposition had been proved."

"In order to win in Nevada, they're going to have to do real, concerted organizing," said Yvanna Cancela, the political director of the Culinary Union 226 Local — Nevada's largest and most influential union, which endorsed Obama over Clinton eight years ago. "2014 wasn't necessarily a Republican wave. It was a massive not-voting on behalf of the populations they want to turn out. In order to change that behavior, they're going to have to invest and organize an infrastructure that moves those folks to the polls."

Hillary's Nevada play

Clinton's return to the state isn't just about campaigning for the caucus. It's also about 2016.
